COLUMBIA SEMINARY: ITS HISTORY / MEMORIALS / RESOURCES AND OPPORTUNITIES

We hope this summary of the history of Columbia Seminary and the listing of the various memorials and funds supporting the theological enterprise here in Decatur will help to provide some insight as to the possibilities for the future.

Through the support of countless Presbyterians throughout the years the endowment funds which provide more than one-third of each year's budget have been continually increased. The Seminary's debt of gratitude is endless, and indeed grows with each gift during each year.

We hope you will learn more about Columbia through these pages, and we invite you to learn even more by visiting the campus and visiting with faculty and students. We thank you for your interest and prayers and look forward eagerly to working with you throughout the days ahead that the Church of Jesus Christ may go from strength to strength.

COLUMBIA SEMINARY — An Introduction

What is a Seminary? What is Columbia Theological Seminary? It is not enough to say it is a school for prospective ministers, though it is that. It is not enough to say it is a graduate school, though it is that. It is not enough to say it is a particular community within the structure of the Presbyterian Church, U.S., though it is that.

Though Columbia Seminary is everything mentioned above, it is more — indeed, its real life is in the more than 2,600 men and women who have completed their studies and living and worshiping and gone from this place to various lives within the Church. Further, Columbia lives in a most real sense in the memories, faces, traditions and shared commitments residing in the hearts and minds of those graduates. Columbia, then, is people; people who have committed themselves to the common purpose of serving Christ in His Church and world — since 1828.

These men and women have provided leadership within the three Synods which own and operate Columbia (Florida, Mid-South and Southeast), throughout the whole denomination and beyond into forty states and twenty foreign countries.

In order to meet the multiplicity of demand within ministry, Columbia seeks and attracts different kinds of people: even though the vast majority of Columbia's graduates go directly in the pastoral ministry (85%), others are trained who fill needs in educational ministries, as missionaries, as chaplains and counselors and administrators.

The education required to achieve the results sought is also varied. It includes academic rigor in the disciplines of Bible, Historical-Doctrinal studies, and the Pastoral area; practical preparation in supervised ministry during the summer or for an intern year; clinical training and preaching, hospital and speech practicums; and personal preparation in spiritual growth, motivation and understanding of the world's problems.

This is at least a partial glimpse of what Columbia Seminary is; as further assistance the story of its life follows.

COLUMBIA SEMINARY — The History

Columbia refers to the first permanent location of the seminary in Columbia, South Carolina, in 1828 a principal cultural, intellectual, and population center of the Southeast.

The first idea of a theological school for the South was planted by the Presbytery of Hopewell (Georgia) as early as 1817, but it was not until 1824 that a constitution for “The Classical, Scientific, and Theological Institution of the South” was adopted by the Presbytery of South Carolina, and the members of the presbytery were authorized to act as the Board of Trustees for that institution.

In 1827, the Board recommended to the Synod that the constitution be altered to make the institution solely a theological seminary. (There had been great opposition to the proposed literary department being in competition with the College of South Carolina.) The official name of the seminary became The Theological Seminary of the Synod of South Carolina and Georgia; it soon became known as Columbia Theological Seminary — a name which was accepted as permanent in 1925. The revised constitution was adopted by Synod in 1828, and it was resolved to get the seminary into operation immediately.

The Reverend Thomas Goulding, pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Lexington, Georgia, was elected the first Professor of Theology in December of 1828, and he gathered five students for instruction in the manse. Following completion of arrangements in Columbia, they moved to a campus there in January of 1830.

That same year, the Reverend George Howe, a New Englander, was elected by the Synod as instructor in languages. The following year he became Professor of Biblical Literature, and, shortly, librarian, overseeing the growth of the seminary’s library from the original 300 books collected by the presbyteries in 1829 to more than 3,000 by 1836. Dr. Howe also organized the first curriculum for the Seminary, apparently modeling it after those of the Princeton Seminary and of Andover Theological Seminary. He served nearly fifty years — until his death in 1883.

Lexington, Georgia

Columbia, South Carolina

In 1857, the Synod of Alabama established the adoption of the seminary as "our own, placing its name among those of the institutions which we call 'ours', and which we are to cherish and care for, support, help, and encourage as our own". Florida (as part of the Synod of South Georgia and Florida) joined in 1884, with Mississippi completing the five-synod structure in 1925.

Among the buildings on the Columbia campus was the little chapel — formerly a carriage house — where Woodrow Wilson was to be "reborn for eternity", and where the Presbyterian, U. S., Book of Church Order was written.

By the 1920's, the population of the Southeast — and of Presbyterians in the area — was shifting, and the centers of influence were moving with it. Atlanta had been a transportation center since the 1880's, and so was developing as a commercial, industrial, educational and cultural center, also. Certain Atlanta Presbyterians and leaders of the Seminary were convinced of the city's leadership of the New South and its advantages for the Seminary — and of the Seminary for the city. In 1924, the Board of Directors agreed (after two previous refusals in 1887 and 1904), and the decision was made to move to Atlanta, if a campaign for the new facilities and endowment could be successfully completed in the Synod of Georgia. Launched in 1925, the campaign had a goal of $500,000 which was promptly subscribed. In that success the cooperation of the city's 14,193 Presbyterians in their seventy-four churches played the determining part.

In 1927, the Seminary transferred its Columbia traditions and ministry, its students and faculty, and its books and equipment to a fifty-seven acre Decatur, Georgia, site on the outskirts of Atlanta, joining Candler School of Theology and another eleven of the current twenty-three institutions of higher education in the greater Atlanta area. The wisdom of this decision has been reinforced by the eventual location in Atlanta of the headquarters of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. as well as the headquarters of fifteen other denominations and church organizations; of another eleven educational institutions (including the Interdenominational Theological Center and several church colleges); and by the current reputation that Atlanta enjoys as a cultural center of the nation.

The Synods of Florida, Mid-South and Southeast control and support Columbia Seminary, and from her derive much of the strength of their leadership.

COLUMBIA SEMINARY — Its Theology

The main task of a minister is to be a theologian — one who helps people understand modern problems in the light of the eternal Biblical witness. Columbia Seminary prepares men and women for today's ministry by creating a theological environment in which faculty and students share an evaluative, questioning, discerning search for a living understanding of the Christian faith.

This faith, in its Presbyterian branch, is Reformed in theology, Presbyterian in government, and Puritan in tradition. In achieving an understanding of this confessional faith, the history of the Church is seen — in its ideas, in its pivotal leaders, and in its changing structures — as the foundation of theological study.

Students enter the seminary because of their motivation and response to God's demands upon them. During their years of struggle and preparation, they further develop their own patterns of personal devotional life, and are stimulated by student preaching, daily chapel services, and faculty and guest preachers and speakers. Campus groups, such as the Society of Missionary Inquiry and the Society for Theological Scholarship, foster further understanding of God at work through the Church.

This understanding of God's expectation of His people — in the Early Church, in the Reformation Church, in the Presbyterian world, and in today's Church — and these beginning preparations for ministering in His name, ready men and women for discovering their points of service to Him.

COLUMBIA SEMINARY — How It Teaches

To be a seminary is to teach, and be taught, in a very special and specialized field. It assumes basic understandings of life and people and the historical influences that have formed them (evidenced, usually, by an undergraduate academic degree).

Columbia Seminary is a particular gathering of men and women committed to beginning a life-long preparation for God's service. Her thirty resident and visiting faculty members bear proud academic and pastoral credentials for the preparation of the Church's leaders. Her more than 200 students come predominantly from the Presbyterian Church, U. S., but her community life is enriched by students from other denominations and from over half the states, and Christian churches in several countries.

These members of the Columbia learning community teach, and are taught, in the formal classroom setting, in seminars, practicums, and other discussion groups, in individual conferences, and in joint program efforts. The faculty-student ratio is nine to one, making possible a creative interplay of ideas and thoughtful participation.

Creative and traditional teaching methods are employed by Columbia's faculty. The traditional lecture, seminar and practicum methods are combined with team teaching, concerted planning for small-group learning situations, and varied use of video tape equipment.

The challenge and resources of community and other educational institutions are made available to the student body through the Seminary's cooperative work with such organizations as the Atlanta Theological Association, the Georgia Association for Pastoral Care, the Protestant Radio and Television Center, the Center for Mediterranean Studies, The Urban Training Organization of Atlanta, Emory University, Georgia State University, Agnes Scott College, and other colleges and universities. The Seminary is a fully-accredited member of the Association of Theological Schools.

The completion of degree work is only a marking point in educating for ministry. Questions raised, methods taught, attitudes fostered — all encourage the life-long process of education. The Church deserves this, and the Seminary's three supporting synods (Florida, Mid-South and Southeast) are the especial recipients of its advantages.

Columbia recognizes this and through its program of Graduate and Continuing Education provides educational resources and support for ministers throughout their lives. At times ministers are invited to return for specialized study with the faculty. At other times the Seminary's resources are made available to ministers near their homes as an extension service. All of these opportunities are designed to encourage and make possible the further development of the Church's leaders.

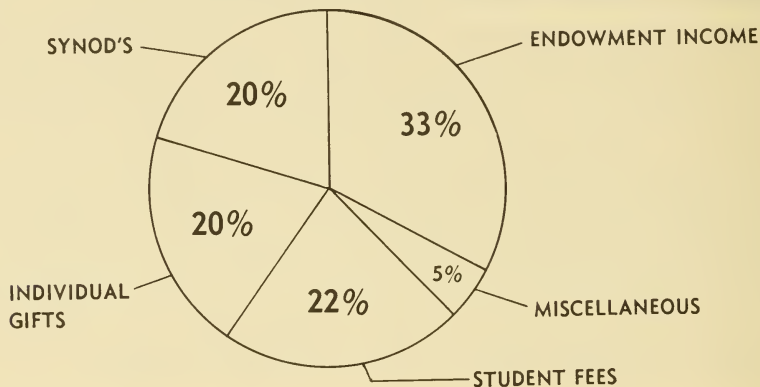

COLUMBIA SEMINARY — Its Support

Columbia Seminary has this task: to prepare men and women as the leaders, pastors, and teachers of the Presbyterian Church, U.S. Its supporting synods have historically stated, and repeatedly confirmed, their intentions to be responsible for the enabling support of this Seminary.

Their support has included gathering the first books for the fledgling library, naming and encouraging leaders of the Seminary (from professors to members of the board of directors), encouraging the move from Columbia to Atlanta, and looking to Columbia Seminary for their new leadership.

And that support is financial. It costs approximately $5,000 a year to educate each student. Twenty percent of that cost is covered by student-paid fees. Synod benevolence gifts meet almost another twenty percent. Individual annual gifts to Living Endowment provide yet another twenty percent.

Income from the endowment provides the biggest single portion of the annual budget, about 33%. When it is noted that 20% of the annual budget is provided annually by individual gifts and 33% comes from the income from endowment gifts, it is abundantly clear that Columbia Seminary is highly dependent upon the good wishes and financial support of individuals.

It is our belief that individuals interested in the Christian enterprise can do no better to further that interest than to invest in Columbia; both today through current gifts to the operating budget and tomorrow through income to endowment. Through the endowment fund permanent memorials can pay perpetual tribute to men and women who have served Christ and His Church in the past and can participate in the future training and support of every student coming to Columbia in the future. Many purposes for such memorials are available, and so the Seminary suggests that individual consultation take place in order to respond as fully as possible to the prospective donor's desires.

SCHOLARSHIP FUNDS

Financial assistance is provided for students at Columbia Seminary on the basis of their individual financial needs. The application process involves financial planning and budgeting in which the student receives the guidance and assistance of the Dean of Students.

Columbia expects students to pay as much of the cost of their education as possible from their own resources. But beyond these resources there are many unmet needs. These needs Columbia attempts to meet so that no qualified student will be denied the education required in preparation for service in the leadership of the Church.

Scholarship Funds provide the resources to help students pay bills. But more than that they also encourage students in their studies by reminding them of the interested concern of men and women in the Church.

Many friends have provided scholarship assistance through gifts large and small. We list below the established funds.

MEMORIAL FUNDS AND FOUNDATIONS

Even when students pay completely the fees charged for theological education they are not paying the full cost. The Presbyterian Church has historically accepted the responsibility for paying a major share of the cost of the training of ministers, missionaries and other full-time church leaders.

The Church meets its responsibility in financing theological education through annual benevolence budgets, special gifts and capital funds. Memorial funds provide over one-third of the annual income for theological education at Columbia Seminary. Undesignated Memorial Funds are especially valuable as they enable Columbia to meet the changing needs of each year and respond to the varied opportunities that come.

Memorial Funds not only honor and perpetuate the interest of Christian friends, but they also underwrite day-to-day expenses and provide for increased service through growth and development of facilities and program.

ENDOWMENT FOR TEACHING

At the heart of the Seminary's ministry of training ministers is its faculty. The men and women who serve as professors carry the responsibility for instruction and also perform a pastoral ministry through their many contacts with students outside the classroom.

Some persons, families and churches choose the endowment of teaching as a means of honoring and expressing gratitude for Christian leaders and strengthening the Seminary. Through this endowment they provide annually at least partial compensation for faculty members in a particular department. Funds for this purpose are necessarily of larger amounts and the Seminary lists here with gratitude the following Funds which exceed $5,000.
